the sun very much. People of African or Asian origin, for example, are particularly vulnerable, as they need more sun to make the same amount of vitamin D. Older people have a reduced ability to make vitamin D and people who are obese are also at greater risk. 'Because vitamin D is fat soluble it will go into the fat cells, so very little is released into the blood stream,' explains Dr Inez Schoenmakers, senior research scientist at the MRC Human Nutrition Research Centre in Cambridge. Once a location had been chosen, deciding upon a date was next. There needed to be enough time to collect the supplies and equipment, gather the planes and vehicles, and train the soldiers. This whole process would take a year. The specific date also depended on the timing of low tide and a full moon. All of this led to a specific day—June 5, 1944. Many of these paratroopers were killed before they even hit the ground; others got caught in trees and were shot by German snipers. Still others drowned in Rommel's flooded plains, weighed down by their heavy packs and tangled in weeds. The second wave of 13,000 paratroopers had a very difficult arrival in Normandy. Flying in approximately 900 C-47 airplanes, the Nazis spotted the planes and started shooting. The planes drifted apart; thus, when the paratroopers jumped, they were scattered far and wide. By the late 1870s, Standard Oil was responsible for 90% of the United States' refined oil. The company was growing both vertically and horizontally. Its products had found their way into nearly every American household. Standard Oil's increased market share and profits allowed the company to expand and begin marketing other products. The Allied landing boats were headed to five beaches spread out over 50 miles of coastline. These beaches had been code-named, from west to east, as Utah, Omaha, Gold, Juno, and Sword. The Americans were to attack at Utah and Omaha, while the British struck at Gold and Sword. The Canadians headed toward Juno. At Juno, the Canadian soldiers had a bloody landing. Their landing boats had been forced off course by currents and thus had arrived at Juno Beach a half hour late. This meant that the tide had risen and many of the mines and obstacles were thus hidden under water. An estimated half of the landing boats were damaged, with almost a third completely destroyed. The Canadian troops eventually took control of the beach, but at a cost of more than 1,000 men.
