

While we as humans pride ourselves on developing our own rich cultures, we often forget that cats indulge in rules all their own. This is important to understand when bringing a new kitty into your home, as cats are notorious for operating. Dogs and cats are from different species of animals, appealing to different types of people. Both have provided services and companionship to humans for many centuries. Even though each species has its own distinct looks and characteristics. It's tempting to believe you know everything about your furry, feline friend(s). However, you're probably wrong. From history and biological anatomy to their behavioral patterns, there's a lot to know about cats. Cats are not only fur babies. Despite their reputation for being dominant and independent, cats have effortlessly made their way into the hearts of many humans. The domesticated ones have even found a home in neighborhoods while others continue to thrive in the wild. Re. Dogs and cats are interesting creatures, sometimes exhibiting strange behaviors that may leave you scratching your head. What does nature have to do with the weird things our domesticated dogs and cats do? Here's a look at some of the most. Cats have been each others companions for centuries of documented history. Some of the very first documentation of humans and cats together date back to Ancient Egypt when cats were also their guardians. Just like there are dog people in the Caterpillar (CAT) leads as a manufacturer in the construction and mining equipment industry. Other products the company produces are diesel-electric engines, diesel engines, natural gas engines and industrial turbines. To find parts for CAT. Pet behavior can be a total mystery - luckily, most of it has a perfectly reasonable scientific explanation. As it turns out, a lot of your pet's. In ancient Egypt, wealthy families dressed their cats in elegant jewels because they believed cats had magical powers. Nowadays, cat culture has co-opted how we communicate. Who hasn't emphasized their text messages with whatever cat .gif f. Cats are cute, but they're also little wrecking crews in a home or yard thanks to their natural tendencies to scratch and mark territories. Instead of expensive concoctions, make your own cat repellent to get the job done. Myth: Cats can explore outdoors on their own. The CFA's International Cat Show in Cleveland, Ohio. Aluminum foil: Since cats hate the feeling and noise foil makes, you can place strips down near your furniture to keep your cat from scratching your couches and chairs. Cats always have your best interests at heart, and it's therefore essential to them to make sure that everyone you encounter knows that you belong to them. After careful consideration, cats decided that one of the best ways to achieve this outcome is decorating every piece of clothing you own with fur. Biologists theorize that many aquatically oriented felines swim because they have an instinctual need to avoid extreme heat, and keeping cool is easy in a pond or a lake. Added benefit—while you're swimming, you can catch some fish for lunch! Cats may also develop allergies in a home that contains a lot of pollen, mold, dust or aerosol products. Yes, it's important to remember that a cat's lungs are far smaller, and therefore far less capable, than a human's lungs. Say no to household air pollutants— for you and your cat! How Do You Find Free Shredding Events Near You?. What you can do: Take your cat outside on a leash and harness—they can walk on a leash if you're patient and consistent. Or set up an outdoor screened enclosure or run, a safe space for pouncing on bugs and feeling grass on their toes. Nothing can be more obnoxious when you're trying to get a good night's sleep than hearing your cat sprinting back and forth across the bedroom floor. What is the reason behind this spastic behavior? Cats are nocturnal animals, meaning they become more active at night. A house cat who isn't getting exercise by hunting for food during the day may display a burst of energy at night. As it turns out, a lot of your pet's quirky habits come down to nothing more than evolution. Other behaviors (both cute and weird) have more serious ramifications. Here are 30 of your dog's and cat's most off-the-wall behaviors, and the reasons behind them. Everyone knows that cats go crazy for catnip. At least, most of them do. Approximately one-third of the worldwide domestic cat population doesn't react to catnip at all. Their bodies don't contain the gene that allows them to translate the scent and taste of the plant into psychotropic madness. If the CFA International Cat Show feels a bit too competitive by nature, then the Cat Film Festival is the right place for you. The annual festival travels all year to cities across North America and features a two-hour collection of short films about cats. To make your viewing experience even better, each location they screen in collects funds to donate to a local animal welfare group. Not only is a car tire just another vertical object, it also holds a plethora of smells - food, garbage and roadkill, to name a few. Most dogs like smelly things, and they like to be the last one to mark a given spot. So one thing you can bet on - once one dog has peed on a car tire, others will follow suit. Cats hate citrus, says The Nest. Fill a spray bottle with water and ten drops of lemon or orange essential oils and spray. There are many. Some cats prefer to attack everything, just in case. Should they encounter anything that hangs, dangles or in any way appears shreddable, most cats prefer to destroy first and ask questions later. More often than not, the issue is that your dog smelled something really exciting and he wants to get that scent all over his body. Unfortunately, the scents he likes are usually really gross. What's the appeal? Experts believe stinky odors might help your dog mask his own scent, keeping him hidden from prey. Why Do Cats Raise Their Tail-end in the Air?. Why Do Pets Follow You Into the Bathroom?. Whether it's achieving the perfect peek out of a low window, mastering the art of screaming for food or demanding you meet every need immediately, your cat has mastered them all. Don't be surprised if the cat proves to be the perfect teacher (or purr-fessor?) for your baby. What Are Some Fruits That Start With the Letter P?. If you've ever shared your home with a cat, then you possibly know about the taste test that cats expect all food to undergo in their presence. First and foremost, any item you plan to ingest must first be thoroughly sniffed by your feline companion. Dogs aren't the only ones that like to chow down on the green stuff. On occasion, you'll also see a cat going to town on the lawn. Are the reasons the same? Not really. When your cat eats grass, it's not because he's bored- he's actually trying to make himself vomit. Weird Things Cats And Dogs Do- And The Meanings Behind Them. Their amazing jumping ability and lightning-fast reflexes are a result of millennia spent searching for prey. Though they might not know it, that colorful tuft of feathers on the end of a stick is a representation of the animals that a cat's ancestors hunted. Pretty cool, huh? Dogs and cats have a certain body language that they display. When content, the animal can often be found curled up in a resting position. However, if the animal feels threatened, you will see characteristics such as a tenseness between their shoulders, tucked tails, and tufts of fur sticking up along their back. It's tempting to believe you know everything about your furry, feline friend(s). However, you're probably wrong. From history and biological anatomy to their behavioral patterns, there's a lot to know about cats. The papillae help a cat to clean itself more thoroughly, which is great since cats can spend a huge portion of their lives cleaning themselves. In the wild, these fleshy spikes also help felines to lick every last bit of meat and tissue from a prey's bones. Scratching isn't a behavior you should discourage; instead teach your cat where to scratch and what is off limits. Cover areas that are off limits with double-sided tape or aluminum foil. The smells of citrus and menthol are typically a scratching deterrent for cats, so try soaking cotton balls in cologne or muscle rub and place them on the (non-fabric) surfaces you'd prefer your kitty leave alone. If you want to keep your cat's claws off of the furniture, try covering off-limit spots with unappealing materials, like aluminum foil or double-sided tape. In addition, you can try spraying those areas with scents they don't enjoy, like menthol. Of course, the best bet is to keep trying new toys until you find one your cat DOES like. Our fuzzy feline companions can spend up to half of their lives sleeping. During a typical day, a cat may spend up to 30 percent of its time at rest. Of course, anyone might sleep half the day away if they had someone feeding, loving and looking after them all the time. Because cats spend so much time cleaning themselves, and because most of them are covered in fur, hairballs can become a common issue for some kitties. This ailment is especially common in cats with longer, heavier coats. Owners should be aware that daily brushing and proper nutritional care can lessen the occurrence of hairballs. Owners are protectors and providers— the largest, seemingly oldest ones around in the eyes of a pet cat— so it does make sense that they would come to see people as gigantic parents, allowing them never to have to grow up.
